THE PROBLEM

Why skilled studios still struggle to stay booked.

Traffic that never turns into leads
Your website or page gets visitors, but hardly any of them ever book.

Leads that cost far too much
When enquiries do come in, each one ends up costing more than it should.

No idea where clients come from
You cannot tell which channel brings paying clients, so you cannot do more of it.

WHY I'M BUILDING KINSAKE

I grew up in my grandparents' home and lived with them until I was 18, when I left for college far away. I remember the sườn ram, caramelized pork ribs, from their kitchen. I remember my grandmother scolding me when I did something wrong, words I didn't appreciate until I was grown. And I remember my grandfather trimming the hedge along the fence, then splitting a coconut for me to drink.

None of it felt like something to keep. It was just everyday life, and I assumed it would always be there. By the time I understood what those days were worth, and knew how to build something that could have saved them, my grandparents were gone. What I wish I had kept most are their voices and pictures of them. It's one of the regrets I carry.

Today I'm the one in my home who keeps track of how everything works: the Wi-Fi password, the account numbers for the power and water bills, where the hammer, screwdrivers and pliers live. Your list is probably different. But a lot of us are that person for

He looks down. You look up.

Aegis Hall is a single gallery given to a single god. For six months it shows The Thunder Cycle: five canvases, each taller than the person standing in front of it, hung in the dark so that the only light seems to come from the lightning.

Every plate is built the same way — the god at the top, the sky around him, the mortals at the foot — and the hall is built for that: you walk below them.

STORY · SINCE 2018

Freddo means cold.

It started as a fridge. In the summer of 2018 we ran a kiosk on the rocks at Boccadasse, Genova, and the only thing anyone asked was: is it cold?

So we stopped selling anything that couldn't live in that fridge. Then we started making what went in it — first a fizzy fruit soda, then apple, then more apple, then something for after six. Four labels now, one rule: it has to taste right at 4 °C, straight from the can.

Story

Four labels, in the order they happened.

01 2018 · SPARKLING PROBIOTIC SODA
RELOW
The kiosk soda. Fermented fruit, live cultures, no sugar — because people wanted a second can and not the sugar of two. Orange came first; lemon and mango followed the next summer. RELOW →

02 2020 · STILL APPLE JUICE DRINK
PURESIP
Green apple cut with water, for lunch rather than dessert. The can's green drips were drawn from the way condensation runs down a cold one. PURESIP →

03 2021 · 100% PRESSED FRUIT
PURE FROOT
Only apples, pressed and canned the same day in Val di Non. No added sugar and no water. The man on the can is holding up the whole point. PURE FROOT →

Story

PURESIP, eleven minutes out of the fridge.

How a can gets cold.

8 °C — Press
Fruit is pressed within a day of picking and held at 8 °C so it doesn't start to cook in its own warmth.

6 °C — Blend
Juice, water and — for RELOW — the cultures are mixed cold. Carbon dioxide dissolves better the colder the liquid is.

2 °C — Fill
Cans are filled at 2 °C, the coldest point in the line, and sealed within a second.

4 °C — Drink
The last step is yours: two hours in the fridge, or twenty minutes in a bucket of ice water.

A local family business in Hullbridge. Machines go out on our own lorry to most of Essex, on their own or with a driver.

The lorry takes a digger, a dumper and the buckets for the job in one trip, drops them where you need them and fetches them back when you're done.
